From the Committee for revising the Custom Regulations—. Replying to the reference made to them respecting the proposal of levying by farm the general inland duty established by Regulation I of 1812, and reporting on the late instructions of the Court of Directors on the subject of transferring the superintendence of the Sea Customs from the Board of Trade to the Board of Revenue. The Committee take occasion to review the nature and effects of the various duties of custom which have at different times prevailed in these territories, and to discuss the merits of the present general inland duty, and the practicability and expediency of assimilating the duties under the different Presidencies. They think the general inland duty liable to great objections which would be aggravated rather than diminished, if it were levied by farm and that it ought therefore to be abolished. But should those objections not to be deemed valid, they can see no reason why the tax if a good one should be confined to this Presidency, or should constitute an obstacle to the adoption of one uniform system of customs for the whole of British India. The Committee also think the sea custom should be transferred to the Board of Revenue agreeably to the desire of the Court of Directors. Cons., 23rd June, No. 79, p. 1413.
